ABSTRACT

The objective of the present work is to develop a simple, precise, accurate, validated stability indicating HPTLC method for the determination of Entecavir in bulk and tablet dosage form. The HPTLC method employed TLC aluminium plates precoated with silica gel 60F-254 as the stationary phase. The solvent system consisted of Chloroform:Toluene: methanol: ammonia (7:2:1:0.2v/v) and then scanned. The system was found to give compact spot for Entecavir (R_f value of 0.51 ± 0.02). The linearity was found to be in the concentration range 300-1800 ng/spot. The reliability and analytical performance of the proposed methods, including linearity, range, precision, accuracy, detection and quantitation limits, were statistically validated. When entecavir was subjected to different stress conditions; the proposed methods could effectively separate the drug from its degradation products, and were thus considered as good stability-indicating procedures. It is concluded that this method can be applied for routine quality control of Entecavir in dosage forms as well as in bulk drug.

INTRODUCTION

Entecavir (ETV) is a nucleoside analog [1] with the chemical name 2-Amino-9-[(1S,3R,4S)-4-hydroxy-3-(hydroxymethyl)-2-methylidenecyclopentyl]-6,9-dihydro-3H-purin-6-one (Fig.1) [2]. Entecavir is a guanosine nucleoside analogue with selective activity against hepatitis B virus (HBV). It is designed to selectively inhibit the Hepatitis B virus, blocking all three steps in the replication process [3, 4].

Literature survey revealed, few analytical methods which include UV-spectrophotometric methods [5-7] liquid chromatographic methods [8, 9] have been reported for estimation of ETV. However, to our knowledge, no information related to the stability-indicating UV and high-performance thin-layer chromatography (HPTLC) determination of ETV in

ABSTRACT

The purpose of this research was to develop a novel gastroretentive drug delivery system based on wet granulation technique for sustained delivery of active agent. Quick GI transit could result in incomplete drug release from the drug delivery system above the absorption zone leading to decreased efficacy of the administered dose and thus less patient compliance. Gastroretentive floating tablets, which was designed to provide the desired sustained and complete release of drug for prolonged period of time. Gastroretentive floating tablets of lafutidine were prepared by wet granulation technique using different concentrations of Gum Kondagagu, Gum olibanum and Locust bean Gum. The optimized formulation (LF14) exhibited 99.54% drug release in 12 hrs, while the buoyancy lag time was 33 sec. In-vitro drug release kinetics was found to follow both the Zero order and the possible mechanism of lafutidine release from the optimized formulation might be attributed to super case II transport mechanism. The Optimized formulation (LF14) showed no significant change in physical appearance, drug content, floating lag time, in vitro dissolution studies after 75%±5% RH at 40±2°C relative humidity for 6 months.

INTRODUCTION

Oral administration is the most versatile, convenient and commonly employed route of drug delivery for systemic action. Oral controlled release drug delivery have recently been of increasing interest in pharmaceutical field to achieve improved therapeutic advantages, such as ease of dosing administration, patient compliance and flexibility in formulation. A controlled drug delivery system with prolonged residence time in the stomach is of particular interest for drugs that are locally active in the stomach, have narrow absorption window in gastrointestinal tract, are primarily absorbed from stomach and upper part of GIT, are unstable in the intestinal or colonic environment, disturb normal colonic bacteria and exhibit low solubility at high pH values. Gastro retentive dosage form can remain in the gastric region for several hours and hence significantly prolong the gastric residence time of drugs. Prolonged gastric retention improves bioavailability, reduces drug waste, and improves solubility of drugs that are less soluble in a high pH environment. Gastro retention helps to provide better availability of new products with suitable therapeutic activity and substantial benefits for patients [1,2].

Lafutidine has newly developed 2nd generation H₂ antihistaminic blocker. It is exceedingly helpful in gastric and duodenal ulcers. It prevents the gastric mucosal lesions in both acute and chronic gastritis. The lafutidine penetrates the stomach wall and binds the H₂

Abstract

Objective: The objective of present study is to systematically investigate and confirm the folklore use of Gymnospora montana fruits in different models of ulcer. Materials & methods: The ethanolic extract of Gymnospora montana fruit were selected and equipped in doses of 100 and 500 mg/kg. The antiulcer activity of Gymnospora montana was evaluated by aspirin induced ulcers, pyloric ligation models and Cysteamine induced ulcers. Results: It was revealed that ethanolic extract had marked antiulcer activity in all these models at a dose of 500 mg/kg. In addition, it was also found to increase the mucin content of the gastric mucosa. The observed results were attributed to the rich content of flavonoids in the ethanolic extract. Conclusion: The present study affords a significant contribution in confirmation of the folklore effects of a traditional remedy.

Introduction

The term peptic ulcer refers to acid peptic injury of the digestive tract, resulting in mucosal break reaching the submucosa. Peptic ulcers are usually located in the stomach or proximal duodenum, but they can also be found in the oesophagus or Meckel's diverticulum. (Del Valle, 2014). Traditionally, a hypersecretory acidic environment together with dietary factors or stress were thought to cause most peptic ulcer diseases, but the discovery of Helicobacter pylori (H. pylori) infection and the widespread use of non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs) in the second half of the 20th century have changed this perception. NSAIDs including low-dose aspirin are some of the most commonly used drugs. They have good efficacy and a long history of clinical use, but can cause peptic ulcers which may have fatal complications. As widespread use of NSAIDs and aspirin is common in various countries, the associated gastrointestinal toxicities have substantial implications for the healthcare system (Drini, 2017). The occurrence of idiopathic ulcers seems to be increasing and is associated with high mortality (Huang et al., 2002; Wong et al., 2009). In addition, the modern world is encapsulated in the ever-increasing balloon of different stressors that contribute to the ever-increasing incidence of stress-ulcers. Modern lifestyle with increasing dependence on the fast-food also aggravates that problem of peptic ulcer diseases.

The global decline of peptic ulcer disease during the past century has occurred most rapidly in the past two decades (Sonneberg, 2013). This decreasing trend could be related to a cohort effect that occurred before the introduction of potent anti-secretory agents and H. pylori treatment. In the treatment of peptic ulcer, polypharmacy induced side effects, non-compliance, and unhealthy eating habits seem to be the hurdles. Therefore, the use of probiotics, vaccines, and herbal medicines in combination with antibiotics or as monotherapy seems to be particularly promising. It is reported that some natural food products, like broccoli, garlic, green tea, licorice, honey, and curcumin, could be used as adjuvant therapies (Cerella et al., 2011). Now-a-days plants are being looked upon by the pharmaceutical industry as most important source for active leads.

One such promising plant can be Gymnospora montana, which is a traditional herbaceous plant of Celastraceae family found in different regions of India. In vernacular language it is called as Vikalo. It is a large, much branched, spinescent, woody shrub or a small tree. It is a shrub found in

Aim: The aim of the present research work is to prepare ethosome of Sesamum indicum L. seed extract, its incorporation into gel formulations and to characterize the developed ethosomes and gel formulations using various parameters. Methods: Different formulations of ethosomes using phospholipids (1–4%) and ethanol (10–40%) were prepared using S. indicum L. seed extract by solvent dispersion technique and were characterized. Carbopol 934 was used to prepare ethosomal gel. Results: The size of ethosomes was found to be in the range of 139.7 ± 10.55 – 231.8 ± 12.43 nm while polydispersity index ranges from 0.114 to 0.348 and ZP were between –17.0 and 47.7 mV. Morphology studies showed smooth surface under phase contrast microscope showed, transmission electron microscope showed unilamellar nature with near spherical shape. The EE of ethosomes was found to be in the range of $82.12 \pm 1.88\%$ and $97.26 \pm 0.65\%$. Ethosomes were further added to Carbopol 934 for gel formation, and subsequently, evaluated for their physicochemical properties. The pH of the gel formulations was found to be in the range of 5.97 ± 0.01 – 6.22 ± 0.02 . Viscosities of gels were ranging between 6080 and 119200 centipoises at 25 rpm. In vitro diffusion study was conducted for ethosomes incorporated in viscous gel. Conclusions: The present study revealed that ethosomal vesicular delivery system of seeds extract of S. indicum L. is an encouraging novel approach for herbal extract.

INTRODUCTION

Sesamum indicum L., belongs to the family Pedaliaceae, is a high altitude medicinal plant having an excellent nutritional content along with a huge pharmacological profile. Sesame is used in villages for auspicious occasions, rituals, religious sacrifices, and marriage ceremonies due to its religious and mythological importance. Apart from its religious significance sesame is used as medicine. Sesame is known as the king of oilseeds due to the high oil content (50–60%) of its seed.^[1] The seeds of sesame contain a number of important phytochemicals which includes alkaloids, flavonoids, glycosides, phenols, anthraquinones, tannins, carbohydrates, and proteins. Sesame reveals the truth that it is a more beneficial plant with anti-pyretic, anti-inflammatory, antioxidant, antimicrobial, anti-hypertensive, anticancer, wound healing activity, and other properties.^[2]

According to the World Health Organization, 80% of the population in developed countries relies on plant-based traditional medicines to maintain their primary health care needs. High treatment cost and side effects along with drug resistance are major problems associated with synthetic drugs.^[3] The medicinal values of plants are due to the presence of chemically active substances that produce a definite physiological action on human and animal health. However, delivery of herbal drugs also requires modifications. Nowadays, novel drug delivery system opens the door toward the development of herbal drug delivery systems. Novel drug delivery system is advantageous in delivering the herbal drug at a predetermined rate, and delivery of drug at the site of action which minimizes the toxic effects with an increase in bioavailability of drugs. Incorporation of novel drug delivery technology to herbals

Abstract

The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of Nerolidol on the penetration of Acyclovir in the form of transdermal gel formulation. Different formulations were prepared containing different concentrations of Nerolidol (0-5%) using Aloe vera gel as a base. Formulations evaluated for pH, Viscosity, Percent drug content, Spreadability, Diffusion study and In-vitro permeation study. Rheological study showed that viscosity is inversely proportional to the rate of shear and thus the system shows pseudoplastic behaviour. pH of all the formulations was found to be around 6 which is skin compatible. The percent drug content was found to be within the range of 98 to 101% for all the formulations. Spreadability of formulations is found to be in the range of 11.25 to 12.66 gm/cm²/sec. Stability studies showed that the formulation is stable at 40°C at 75% RH for a period of one month. It was evident that the permeation of Acyclovir was enhanced, across freshly excised hairless rat abdominal skin, in presence of Nerolidol which can be attributed to increased lipid disruption in the stratum corneum.

Comparison of F5 with marketed formulation (Acicvir, Cipla) for permeation of Acyclovir across hairless rat abdominal skin, showed greater flux 12.89 mg/cm² as compared to flux 4.74 mg/cm² hr of marketed formulation. F0 (without Nerolidol) showed better flux of 6.59 mg/cm² hr than the marketed product, this can be attributed to the use of Aloe vera gel as an absorption base which consists of lignins, that intensify penetrative properties.

Keywords: Acyclovir, Nerolidol, Aloe vera gel, Transdermal gel

Introduction

Herpes simplex virus-1 (HSV-1), an alpha herpes virus, is a large DNA virus that causes primary herpetic gingivostomatitis, mucocutaneous orofacial disease, and ocular disease; recurrent lesions are common on the face and on the lips and less common intraorally. HSV infections are among the most common diseases of humans, with an estimated 60-95% of the adult population being infected by at least one of them. Available therapies include topical acyclovir, oral acyclovir, penciclovir, docosanol, and valacyclovir. Acyclovir is a guanosine analogue antiviral drug. It is one of the most commonly used antiviral drugs for the treatment of herpes simplex virus infections, as well as in the treatment of varicella zoster (chickenpox) and herpes zoster (shingles). Oral bioavailability of Acyclovir is only 20%. It is commonly marketed as tablets (200 mg, 400 mg, 800 mg and 1 gram), topical cream (5%), intravenous injection (25 mg/mL) and ophthalmic ointment (3%). Cream preparations are used primarily for labial herpes simplex. The intravenous injection is used when high concentrations of acyclovir are required. The ophthalmic ointment preparation is only used in herpes simplex keratitis. Acyclovir belongs to BCS Class III i.e it has low permeability, hence it also faces limitations while administering topically. This problem can be overcome by using chemical penetration enhancers in the formulation. Nerolidol (terpene), a naturally occurring volatile oil, appear to be promising candidate for clinically acceptable enhancer. Aloe vera gel possess soothing, moisturizing and healing properties. Anthraquinones in Aloe vera breakup residue, pus and lifeless cells, bring blood to the region and flush out material from the

Objective: To develop a simple, precise, accurate, validated stability indicating reverse phase high-pressure liquid chromatography and high-performance thin layer chromatography method for the determination of zanamivir in bulk and capsule dosage form.

Methods: The high-pressure liquid chromatography separation was achieved on Agilent TC C18 (2) 250 x 4.6 mm, 5 μ column using mobile phase composition of methanol-0.02 M phosphate buffer, pH 3.5, 50:50 (v/v). Flow rate was maintained at 1 ml/min at an ambient temperature. Quantification was achieved with ultraviolet detection at 230 nm. The retention time obtained for zanamivir was at 3.6 min. The method employed thin layer chromatography aluminum plates precoated with silica gel 60F-254 as the stationary phase. The solvent system consisted of chloroform: methanol: acetic acid (4.5:0.5:0.3v/v) and then scanned. The system was found to give a compact spot for zanamivir (R_f value of 0.29 \pm 0.02).

Results: In HPLC, the result obtained with the detector response was found to be linear in the concentration range of 2-12 μ g/ml. In HPTLC, the linear regression analysis data for the calibration plots showed a good relationship with $r^2=0.9999\pm0.0001$ in the concentration range 500-3000 ng/spot. The reliability and analytical performance of the proposed methods, including linearity, range, precision, accuracy, detection and quantitation limits, were statistically validated. When zanamivir was subjected to different stress conditions; the proposed methods could effectively separate the drug from its degradation products, and were thus considered as good stability-indicating procedures.

Conclusion: It is concluded that this method can be applied for routine quality control of zanamivir in dosage forms as well as in bulk drug.

INTRODUCTION

The chemical name of zanamivir (ZMV) is 5-(acetylamino)-4-[(amino imino methyl)-amino]-2,6-anhydro-3,4,5-trideoxy-D-glycero-D-galacto-non-2-enonic acid. It has a molecular formula of $C_{12}H_{20}N_4O_7$ and a molecular weight of 332.3 [1, 2] as shown in fig. 1. The proposed mechanism of action of zanamivir is via inhibition of influenza virus neuraminidase with the possibility of alteration of virus particle aggregation and release [3, 4]. Mechanism of action has on viral neuraminidase catalyzes cleavages of terminal sialic acid residues attached to glycoprotein and glycolipids, a process necessary for release of virus from host cell surfaces [5].

Fig. 1: Chemical structure of Zanamivir

A literature survey reveals there are few analytical methods such as ultraviolet (UV) method [6], HPLC method [7, 8] and high-throughput HILIC-MS/MS study [9] have been reported for estimation of ZMV, but there is no stability indicating method by reverse phase high-pressure liquid chromatography (RP-HPLC), and high-performance thin-layer chromatography (HPTLC) was reported for ZMV. It was felt necessary to develop a stability indicating RP-HPLC and HPTLC methods for the determination of ZMV as bulk and in pharmaceutical dosage form. According to the stability test guidelines issued by ICH [10-14], in the present study, HPLC and induced stability studies were carried out for ZMV to establish its stability characteristics and also an analytical method developed by RP-HPLC and developed method was validated

MATERIALS AND METHODS

Materials

A pharmaceutical grade of zanamivir kindly supplied as a gift sample by Cipla Ltd., Mumbai, India. All chemicals and reagents used were of HPLC of analytical grade and were purchased from Merck Chemical, India. Analytical grade sodium hydroxide, hydrochloric acid, and 10% hydrogen peroxide were used.

Instrumentation and chromatographic conditions

For HPLC

Agilent technologies 1260 LC system with a gradient pump connected to DAD UV detector, LC-GC AGN204PO balance was used for all weighing an Agilent zorbax eclipse C18 column (150 mm x 4.6 mm i.d., 5 μ m) was maintained at 30 $^{\circ}$ C. The mobile phase was composed of a mixture of methanol-0.02 M phosphate buffer, pH 5, 50:50 (V/V). The flow rate of the mobile phase was set at 1 ml/min. Measurements were made with 20 μ l of injection volume. The retention time obtained for zanamivir was at 3.6 min. For the analysis of forced degradation samples, the photodiode array detector was used in scan mode with a scan range of 200-400 nm.

For HPTLC

HPTLC has performed on 20 cm x 10 cm aluminum plates coated with silica gel aluminum plate 60F-254 (0.2 mm thickness E. Merck, Germany). ZMV was spotted in the form of bands of width 6 mm with Camagmicrolitre syringe using CamagLinomatV (Switzerland). A constant application rate of 150 nl/sec was employed, and space between two bands was 15 mm. The slit dimension was kept 6 mm x

Bombay Blood Group: An Overview

Vikrant Nikam^{1*}, Vivekanand Kashid², Jyoti Khapare², Sachin Gaikwad¹

Abstract: The Bombay Blood Group is rare blood group with absence or deficiency of H antigen. This is first reported in Bombay (Mumbai) 1952. Named for the city in which it was first discovered. It is a blood group which shows absence of A, B, H antigens on red cells and presence of anti-A, anti-B and anti-H antibodies in serum. The H antigen is located on the surface of red blood cells and is the precursor of A and B antigens. H antigen can be synthesized by H gene FUT1 and FUT2 which is located on chromosome 19 and give rise to glycosyl transferase that add 1-fucose to a precursor substance to produce H antigen on red cells. Bombay group would be categorized as O group because they wouldn't show any reaction to anti-A and anti-B antibodies just like a normal O group. When a cross matching is done then it would show cross-reactivity or incompatibility. The reverse or serum grouping has to be performed to detect the Bombay blood group.

INTRODUCTION

Bombay blood phenotype was first discovered in Bombay in India by Dr. Y.M. Bhende in 1952. Named for the city in which it was first discovered. It describes individuals whose RBC's lack the H antigen, also known as Oh group.

DISCOVERY

In 1952, Dr Bhende along with his co-authors published a paper on a new blood group the Bombay blood group. This was based on their research work over the previous few months.

In December 1951, a patient had been admitted to K.E.M. hospital after a railway accident. He was found to be O-Positive but on cross-matching his serum agglutinated all O group cells. Plasma was transfused. [1]

Both the Bombay and Para-Bombay phenotype are the result of point mutation in the FUT1 gene which results in the formation of complete H deficient phenotype or partial H deficient phenotype. These two rare phenotype naturally develop anti H antibodies that cause problems in pre transfusion testing. [2]

The Blood Group is characterised by absence of normal ABH antigens and have co-responding antibodies in serum. This blood group is suspected when reagent O cells show agglutination in reverse or back typing or during antibody screening. The Bombay phenotype which was initially mistyped as O group. [3]

The blood group A means antigen of type A and antibody of type B in blood. In AB both antigen A and B and no antibodies. In O only antibodies A and B no antigen present. Instead of these blood groups the antigen H and antibodies H present and no other blood can given to it is called Bombay blood group. They can receive only from transfusion with Bombay blood type. [4]

Bombay blood group, known as Oh (or) H/H blood group is the rare blood type. The Bombay group (HH) results from the inheritance of two rare recessive h genes which occur at a locus other than the ABO gene locus. The H antigen is the precursor for the formation of A and B antigens and its absence is termed as H antigen deficient phenotype. It results in, Bombay or Para-Bombay blood group in an individual. [5]

It is a blood group which shows absence of A, B, H antigens on red cells and presence of anti-A, anti-B and anti-H antibodies in serum. The H antigen is located on the surface of red blood cells and is the precursor of A and B antigens. H antigen can be synthesized by H gene (FUT1) and (FUT2) which is located on chromosome 19 and give rise to glycosyl transferase that add 1-fucose to a precursor substance to produce H antigen on red cells.

A patient with Bombay blood group should be transfused only with same group. [6]

Bombay blood group is the rare phenotype and it can be mistaken as O. So proper testing is required to detect Bombay phenotype. Basic test with Anti H lectin confirms the absence of H antigen and reverse grouping with O cell confirms the presence of Anti H in the patient plasma. Patient should be aware of Bombay phenotype and sufficient number of units should be reserved prior to the surgery as there is no alternative red cell transfusion in O Bombay phenotype. In emergency if there is any delay in obtaining Bombay phenotype units, patient should be supported only with the plasma or plasma expander. Never to transfuse the patient with O blood group as it contains higher number of H antigen which leads to acute transfusion reaction.

PROPERTIES OF BOMBAY BLOOD GROUP [7]

1. Absence of H, A and B antigens; NO agglutination with anti-A, anti-B, or anti-H lectin.
2. Presence of anti-A, anti-B, anti-AB and potent wide thermal range anti-H in the serum.
3. A, B, H non-secretor (no A, B, or H substances present in saliva).
4. Absence of H enzyme in serum and H antigen on red cells.
5. Presence of A or B enzymes in serum and red cells.
6. A recessive mode of inheritance.
7. Red cells of the Bombay group are compatible only with the serum from another Bombay individual.

Individuals with Bombay blood group can donate to all ABO blood group people and can only accept from Bombay blood group people. The Bombay anti-H is an IgM antibody that can bind complement and cause red cell lysis. Because the H antigen is common to all ABO blood group, Bombay Abstract: The present research work focuses on the study of influence of various ingredients, concentration of ingredients and process parameters on the formulation of Solid lipid nanoparticles (SLN). The sertaconazole loaded solid lipid nanoparticles (SERT-SLN) were prepared by simple, easily reproducible and novel modified solvent emulsification method. Lipid and surfactant solubilizing potential was determined by solubility study. To improve the properties of SLN some excipients were added like cosurfactant TPGS, organic solvent for nanodroplet structure in SLN and charge induction by stearyl amine. Further study was performed to determine the optimum concentration of components such as concentration of surfactant OLML, stearyl amine, TPGS and organic solvent. The process parameters like stirring rate and time, sonication time and cooling temperature also affect the formation of SLN. The formulations were evaluated for average particle size, polydispersity index (PDI) and zeta potential (ZP). The particle size, PDI and ZP of optimized formulation was observed to be 155.1 nm, 0.23 and 9.76 mV respectively. The TEM study confirms the nanometric size particles with particle size < 200 nm. The DSC and XRD study reveals the presence of amorphous nature of SLN. The SERT-SLN formulation was stable at refrigerator and 25°C. SERT-SLN showed biphasic release pattern initiated with burst and then sustained release.

Keywords: DMSO, Modified solvent emulsification technique, Natural lipid and surfactant, Solid lipid nanoparticles, TPGS.

I. INTRODUCTION

Solid lipid nanoparticles (SLN) were developed at the beginning of the 1990s as a colloidal carrier which was an alternative system to the existing traditional carriers like emulsions, liposomes, niosomes and polymeric nanoparticles. Nanoparticles made up of solid lipid have gained significant attention because of the drug immobility in solid lipid is more than any other carrier system. SLN have distinct advantages which include the possibility of incorporating drugs for controlled release, the low cytotoxicity due to its composition of physiological compounds, the possibility for loading both lipophilic and hydrophilic drugs into the solid matrix and for its likely large scale production. SLN also protect the drug or active pharmaceutical ingredients against the chemical, physical and environmental degradation. Due to these properties SLN have proved to be used for different routes of administration [1]. The excipients used for the preparation of SLN are advantageous for the various drug delivery systems. The various types of solid lipids and surfactants have shown the significant solubilizing potential for lipophilic drug. The compatible nature of these excipients are more accepted and proved to be less allergic [2]. Among various route of administration, SLN has potentially explored as drug carrier for cosmetic and dermal products as SLN can favor drug penetration into the skin. The SLN have number of advantages like maintain a sustained release to avoid systemic absorption, act as a UV sunscreen system, reduce irritation and maintain the skin barrier homeostasis [3]. The dermal absorption of SLN can be influenced by number of factors such as location and skin conditions at the application site, physicochemical properties of the penetrating drug molecule, and physicochemical properties dosage form, others such as lipophilic-hydrophilic gradient, pH gradient and isoelectric point of formulation, formulation ingredients and their concentration i.e the presence of molecules such as solvents, surfactants, enhancers, liquid oil and others may alter or damage stratum corneum by different processes thus causing a potential increase in the absorption of all or selected ingredients of the applied formulation. Various parameters can affect the physicochemical properties of the SLN. Each formulation ingredient and its concentration, different formulation conditions, process and order of process can influence the formation of SLN. Sertaconazole nitrate (SERT), is an imidazole/triazole antifungal drug used to treat fungal skin infection. It is available as a topical cream as it has

Introduction and Guidelines for the Management of Hemophilia: A Review

Vivekanand Kashid^{*1}, Vikrant Nikam², Sachin Gaikwad², Vijay Wagh¹, Sanjay Chaudhari²

Abstract: Hemophilia is an inherited bleeding disorder where one of the bloods clotting proteins is absent or present in a reduced amount. It is an unfortunately a less attracted disease for researchers compared to other life threatening diseases. A diagnosis of hemophilia in you or your child can be a traumatic experience as your knowledge of hemophilia may be very limited or rooted in a past reality where adequate and safe treatment was not available. There is obviously a need to establish facilities and treatment options that will help the patient with hemophilia to manage their life with ease. Current state of the art treatment for hemophilia is available in Ireland. The life expectancy of a child born with hemophilia now in Ireland is essentially normal and their quality of life will be excellent. As this is a genetic disorder no complete cure is possible as of now. The only available treatment option is the infusion of factors and some adjuvant therapies depending upon the bleeding conditions. This article presents a review of hemophilia, in order to produce the attention of medical as well as pharmacy professionals for the management of millions of hemophilic patients.

Keywords: Hemophilia, Chromosomes, Clotting factor, Hemostasis.

HEMOPHILIA:

Hemophilia is a group of inherited blood disorders in which the blood does not clot properly. It is a genetic condition that causes people to keep on bleeding for a long time unless treated. People with hemophilia do not bleed faster than anyone else; but will bleed continuously at the normal rate until they are treated. This is because the blood is unable to clot without any therapy. Internal bleeding is the major concern in hemophilia. Bleeding is common into joints such as knees, ankles and elbows. This may be caused by injury, but in severe hemophilia, can begin spontaneously.^{1,2} Hemophilia is the standard international spelling, also known as haemophilia in the UK, other translations include: hémophilie, hemofilie, hemofili, hemofilia, hāmophilie, emofilia. We will use the standard international spelling for the purpose of this section. Bleeding disorders are due to defects in the blood vessels, the coagulation mechanism, or the blood platelets. An affected individual may bleed spontaneously or for longer than a healthy person after injury or surgery.

The blood coagulation mechanism is a process which transforms the blood from a liquid into a solid, and involves several different clotting factors.

The mechanism generates fibrin when it is activated, which together with the platelet plug, stops the bleeding. When coagulation factors are missing or deficient the blood does not clot properly and bleeding continues. Patients with Hemophilia A or B have a genetic defect which results in a deficiency in one of the blood clotting factors.^{1,3} The first medical professional to describe a disease was Abulcasis. In the tenth century he described families whose males died of bleeding after only minor traumas.^{1,2} While many other such descriptive and practical references to the disease appear throughout historical writings, scientific analysis did not begin until the start of the nineteenth century.

In 1803, Dr. John Conrad Otto, a Philadelphian physician, wrote an account about "a hemorrhagic disposition existing in certain families" in which he called the affected males "bleeders".¹⁸ He recognised that the disorder was hereditary and that it affected mostly males and was passed down by healthy females. His paper was the second paper to describe important characteristics of an X-linked genetic disorder (the first paper being a description of colour blindness by John Dalton who studied his own family). Otto was able to trace the disease back to a woman who settled near
